MINERS ANSWER CALL FOR GENERAL STRIKE AT MIDNIGHT FRIDAY

For the first time in the history of the coal industry both bituminous and anthracite coal fields virtually were idle today as the result of the cessation of work by 600 000 miners effective at midnight last night

Union officials asserted that 100,000 non-union miners were included in the walkout and that 6,000 of the 7 500 mines in the country were shut down

Daily loss of production in anthracite fields were estimated at 202 000 tons and the daily loss in wages at present rates in that branch of the industry at $800 000 affecting 20,000 families

First day of the nationwide suspension fell on the anniversary of the adoption of the eight hour day, April 1, 1898 As the day has been generally observed as a holiday in normal times, estimates of the completeness of the suspension were not regarded as final

Early reports give no indication of serious disorders at any point and it was understood ample forces were left on duty for necessary protection of the mines

No Emergency Exists.

The administration in Washington continued to observe a hands-off policy on the ground that with coal stocks piled up sufficient for six or seven weeks, no emergency existed

Philip Murray, vice-president of the United Mine Workers of America proposed congressional action to prohibit over-development of the coal as a cure for the great evil which has America in the grip of a nationwide strike today

Action to prevent a protracted strike of nearly 12 000 miners in western Canada was started in Calgary by the government conciliation board

Miners officials in Kansas where the industrial court ordered that the present arrangement between miners and operators continue for another month asserted the walkout in that state would be shown on Monday to be complete

The northwest reported supplies sufficient for about two months with more than 18 000,000 tons piled up by the railroads and at the Duluth docks at the head of the lakes.

President Lewis of the miners planned to leave Indianapolis tonight for Washington to "lay the miners case before the house labor committee in detail" on Monday

Operators in the Morgantown district of West Virginia announced they would reopen on Monday on an open shop basis.

OFFICIALS AWAIT REPORTS FROM DISTRICT LEADERS

INDIANAPOLIS April 1—Confident that the suspension of work begun at midnight by union coal miners would result today in a complete tie-up of the country's unionized fields, officials of the United Mine Workers of America at its headquarters here awaited reports from district leaders showing the exact effectiveness of the shutdown

At least 600 000 men—100 000 of them non-union miners—were expected by the union to be enrolled in the walkout, which is planned to continue indefinitely in an effort to force operators to accept the miners' terms for new wage contracts. Preliminary reports to headquarters here were said to indicate that few operators who conduct their mines on the "closed shop" basis planned to attempt continued production

For the first time in the history of the coal industry union officials said both bituminous and anthracite fields were tied up simultaneously and the union estimate was that 6 000 of the 7,500 mines in the country were closed as a result of the walkout The only production by union workers was reported from Kentucky, where 5 000 miners are under contract to work for another year.

The first day of the nation-wide suspension fell on the anniversary of the adoption of the eight-hour day for the miners April 1, 1898 the miners at the central competitive field comprising western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois gained this concession from the operators. Since then the eight hour day has spread into other fields In the past April 1 has been one of general celebrating among union miners in recognition of the eight hour day In the future, union officials said, the day also will mark the start of the greatest strike in the union's history."

An outward calm prevailed at the union headquarters here and officials declared their program for the future would be determined largely by developments now unforeseen The suspension, they said, would be directed largely by district leaders scattered throughout the coal fields Responsibility for the general leadership rests with International President John L. Lewis, who said his "field headquarters" would be wherever he happens to be

Mr Lewis' immediate plans called for him leaving here tonight for Washington, appearing on Monday before the house labor committee and then proceeding to New York to resume wage negotiations with the anthracite operators He declared he expected to lay the 'miners' case before the house committee in detail," but refrained from further comment on his prospective testimony.

NO OFFICIAL ESTIMATE OF THE NUMBER IDLE

PITTSBURGH, PA April 1—No official estimate of the number of union miners in the Western Pennsylvania bituminous coal district who left their work was available from either headquarters of district No 5 United Mine Workers of America, or from the Pittsburgh Coal Producers' association controlling about 75 per cent of the output of the district

Miners' officials expected however, and the operators did not contradict the prediction that some 45,000 union men in the Western Pennsylvania fields and 43 000 more in the central Pennsylvania territory would join the suspension So far as could be learned early today these men quit their posts before midnight yesterday. The greatest doubt centered about the number of non-union men who would join the movement in the vicinity comprising mines in Clearfield county and surrounding territory No statement was forthcoming from union headquarters in Greensburg from which a call had been sent out during the past few days to the non-union men to strike with the organized miners

From Morgantown W Va came word that more than 100 mines had been closed by the walkout Operators of this district have announced that they would reopen on an open shop basis but no work was expected to be done today according to statements from both camps The appearance at this city of four blazing crosses against the sky from hilltops last night startled the populace but no significance was attached to it so far as the mine strike is concerned Five thousand miners from the district will attend a mass meeting today at Star City six miles away

PRACTICALLY ALL MINES IN OHIO ARE SHUT DOWN

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 1—Union coal miners of Ohio numbering approximately 5,000 who answered a nation wide strike call effective at midnight last night were believed to have brought almost complete cessation of mining operations Reports received here today indicated that a few small mines would remain in operation but that practically every one of the large workings in the state would be closed until union officials and operators reach an agreement upon a national wage scale

DO NOT BELIEVE ACTION BY GOVERNMENT NECESSARY

WASHINGTON, April 1—Decided upon a policy of non-intervention at least at this stage of the dispute, the administration viewed the beginning of the national coal strike in anthracite and bituminous mines today with the protection of the general public in the matter of coal supply and prices as the uppermost concern of officials This they believed was assured both by existing conditions and the present coal surplus in addition to production at non-union mines during the strike That the administration is convinced by the government's long study of underlying conditions in the industry and its fruitless efforts to avert the present strike that immediate intervention, in legal or extra legal ways, would be futile and unnecessary was made known last night at a final white house discussion of the question President Harding had been urged during the day by a delegation of church men to make a further attempt to bring about a conference for adjustment of differences, but it was later stated at the white house that no action was advisable at this time

Refusal of the operators to confer with the miners' at the government's solicitation, it was stated, had left 'the government with nothing to do than the general welfare demanded.

LITTLE COAL IS MINED IN STATE OF KANSAS

PITTSBURG, KAN. April 1—Despite orders from the Kansas industrial court extending the agreement between the coal operators and mine unions in this district for 30 days little coal was mined today the first day of the coal strike called by the international union This, however, was not an absolute indication of the result of the strike order, both operators and miners said today, as April 1 is observed in the mine fields as 'eight hour day' and few miners work even when a strike is not in progress The real test of strength would come Monday it was said

Miners in Oklahoma Arkansas and Texas were reported idle today

Love—or a Million Dollars?

How the Problem of Duty to Self and to the Living vs. Loyalty to the Dead with a Contingent Rich Legacy, Was Solved by a Massachusetts War Nurse!

THE nature of such reservations as were in the mind of Eleanor Berlin of Worcester, Mass., when she promised her dying sweetheart that she would never marry, is only known to Miss Berlin. Thus far Miss Berlin hasn't chosen to throw any light on what her attitude toward the agreement was at the time it was made. But she has shown in the most conclusive manner possible that she could no longer be bound by her pledge to the dead man. Miss Berlin has married—and for love. She is now the bride of Raymond L. Goding, a real estate broker of Worcester.

Miss Berlin's action has thrown into the whirlpool of public discussion not only a delicate question of ethics but a question fraught with practical and sentimental considerations as well. For in addition to breaking her promise to her dead fiance she has also forfeited a million dollars.

When Charles A. Hamilton of Chicago, the young Lieutenant of Aviation to whom she was engaged, was dying in a hospital at Ellington Field, Texas, he called Miss Berlin to his side. He told her he would leave her all he had if she would promise to remain single. She promised, a will was immediately drawn up in which she was left $60,000 outright on the basis of this agreement, and Lieut. Hamilton died with a smile on his face. After his death his family allowed her to understand that if she would devote her life to Hamilton's mother and not marry, she would fall heir to the family fortune of about $1,000,000.

Miss Berlin was afforded a clear choice. On the one hand was a fortune, security and position—but all conditioned upon her definite refusal to have anything further to do with love. On the other was entire freedom and the potentialities that life always holds for a beautiful girl.

It was not an easy choice.

To take either course necessitated a big sacrifice.

But when the potentialities of her life materialized in the form of another man; when love again presented itself to her—she did not hesitate. She chose love—and she advises any woman to make the same choice.

As for the ethical point involved in her action, a clue to her mental processes may possibly be found in one of Gouverneur Morris's short stories on a similar theme. In this, a young married woman was asked by her dying husband to swear that she would always remain single out of respect to his memory. She made the promise without hesitation and made easy, thereby, the last moments of the dying man.

She was young and pretty. After a while an inevitable suitor came along. He proposed and she accepted. A relative of the dead man upbraided her for her so-called breach of faith. She replied that her duty to herself and to her living lover was greater than her duty to a man whom she could no longer hurt. The relative then told her that she should never have made her promise to the dying man if she felt it imposed an unnatural obligation upon her.

The young widow's answer to this was that it would have been wicked and cruel not to have humored a dying man, even though she had to tell a lie in order to do it. It was right to make the promise, she felt, and it was equally right to break it.

This fictional character had thought out the whole matter before a decision became necessary. Miss Berlin, however, was uncertain to the last, as an interview which she gave out not long before her marriage indicated. At that time no definite choice was facing her.

She said:

"I simply can not make up my mind. It is a big question. It is not merely one of love against money. If it were it would be easy to decide. But really I do not care for any one sufficiently to call it love; so that the choice does not exist—at present.

"The real problem is what the future holds. There is no way of knowing for a surety whether happiness or unhappiness will result from any decision I may make."

The unusual bequest in favor of Miss Berlin came about as a result of a war-time romance which started in Texas. When the war broke Miss Berlin offered her services as a canteen worker. At Galveston, Texas, she was one of a group of girls serving hot coffee to soldiers coming through on a troop train.

From one of these coaches a tall, handsome, striking young man in an aviator's uniform stepped out. He was Lieut. Hamilton. Miss Berlin offered him refreshments. His interest in her started from that moment.

After taking station at Ellington Field, Lieut. Hamilton pursued his acquaintance with this pretty, dark-haired girl, and it was not long before it became known that they were engaged.

Then, one day, Lieut. Hamilton took his "ship" up for what was to be his last flight. Something went wrong with his controls.

"I rushed to the hospital to see him," said Miss Berlin. "He was dying. He took my hand in his and asked me if I would promise never to marry any other man if he would leave me all he had and would provide for my future.

"He also asked me to go and live with his mother at Chicago. Well, I promised.

"Then while he was dying he had his will drawn up, leaving his money to me and stating the conditions. He signed it and died with a smile."

It is now said that Miss Berlin and Mr. Goding had determined to marry before the terms of the Hamilton will were made public. The marriage was hastened, it was said, to save further embarrassment, for the problem was one that attracted nation-wide interest and hundreds of letters offering advice.

Mr. and Mrs. Goding were married in New York City. Mr. Goding, like Lieut. Hamilton, was in the service during the war.

All for the Faculty — By Paul Bailey

Copyright, 1923, by Public Ledger Company

WHEN [illegible] and allows as [illegible] Skeleton Gulch has got her nerves bucking Cal Harrison, being an obliging sort of cuss and more or less interested in the faculty, decides to have conditions repaired.

"Why," says Miss Prescott, "I've been here one whole month and haven't seen even a dog fight And you have been telling me how wild and woolly the place is. I wish I were back at Cape Cod"

"Now ain't that horrible," says Cal, consoling like It's just my luck. Loppy Loper must be planting his garden or taking a correspondence course in something He ain't been here since Washington's Birthday."

"Loppy Loper?" asks the faculty. "And who might that be?"

"Sure," Cal tells her "Loppy's the official bad man around these here diggin's. He packs a thousand-dollar reward for making last Christmas look like the Fourth of July Why, Loppy would rather put on a hold-up than eat chicken pie."

"And is he coming to Skeleton Gulch?" asks Miss Innocence, clapping her pretty little hands.

"Well, I dunno," ponders Cal, but after he'd give the matter due thought and consideration, he goes on "I wouldn't be astonished if he come He's about due."

Which same was the official commencement of the trouble My pinto, Maria, was the dead image of Loppy Loper's cayuse. And me and Loppy was about the same build physically, only Loppy was awful lop-sided. That's what had give him his name.

But a little difference of shape like that didn't discourage Cal Harrison none whatever After he had posted me on the full details, he ties a mask across my features so's the schoolma-am wouldn't fall in love with my beauty Then he pads my right shoulder up with straw so I will have the proper physical angle. And after he had me all harnessed up he says,

"Steve, old top, yuh sure does look like the real article Fill yuh gun full of blanks and be at the school at 4 P M. sharp. Miss Prescott will be there. I'll attend to that And I'll come along a few minutes later—in time to rescue her."

"Son," says I, being a great admirer of human nerve in any form, "yuh sure does take the chocolate layer. But just how do yuh plan to rescue the winsome maiden from my eager clutches?"

"Oh," he says, "I forgot to tell yuh. After I comes up and calls yuh, Loppy, so she'll know who yuh be, I'll disarm yuh and then we'll wrastle around some to give her a little real action"

"But suppose I overpower yuh?" I asks, not wanting to have things go wrong because of any misunderstanding on my part. "I might just happen, Cal, that I will get a half Nelson onto yuh"

At that he looks sort of disgusted like.

"Steve," he says, "If I should take this yere gun and blow yuh brains out I reckon yuh wouldn't be handicapped none whatever hereafter Can't yuh understand that it wouldn't do for you to win that yere wrestling match? I got to rescue the girl. That's part of the arrangement."

"Oh," I says "I gives in and you saves her from a horrible death and yuh marries her and lives happy ever after I got yuh. But don't do no rough stuff, Cal, 'cause I ain't in this yere thing for money. It's only a favor to you."

"Of course not, Steve," he promises, and that afternoon I rides forth.

I RIDES out of town about a mile to where the little district school gives the prairie an educated appearance and I leaves Maria behind the house of learning And I'm just loading my cannon with blanks when I hears some one behind me. I looks up. Then I says:

"I'm darned"

"I reckon yuh ought to be, twin," says the new arrival, and there wasn't no doubting that it was Loppy Loper, the real thing in flesh and blood

I had to say something, so I remarks:

"Ain't this yere a coincidence now?"

"It sure is," he tells me. "But it'll be a fatality if yuh don't drop that yere artillery yuh're playing with."

I dropped the gun. There wasn't no use arguing the point. Loppy Loper always hit where he looked and he had a dead set right into my midway.

"Who are yuh?" he asks after he'd picked up my hardware,

"Steve Douglas," I tells him, "I line-ride for the Bar A outfit. I—"

"And atween times yuh does character work for the movies, don't yuh?" he asks, which made me think that mebbe he was trying to act sarcastic.

"No," I tells him. "I likes to startle the natives The old town's getting awful dull and the new schoolma'am ain't never seen a real bandit." Which same wasn't brilliant none whatever on my part as Loppy comes back with:

"Yuh don't tell me? Well, I reckon I can do all the startling that's necessary to wake up this yere locality today." And with that he gets down a rope that the pupils had used for a swing and he lashes me to the boardwalk and he tosses some grass over me so's I wouldn't be conspicuous. And after he had gagged my excitation outlet good and proper he drifts around by the side entrance.

My, it sure was aggravating to see the outlaw run up them steps and knock sort of coy like at the door.

"Good morning, teacher," he says, when Miss Prescott hies forth. "Where can I make the necessary arrangements for a post-graduate course? I wants to take a reading, writing and arithmetic."

Now little Miss Anita Prescott was from the Massachusetts coast, where the only excitement they ever has is caused by the cods wiggling around on the wharf. So you couldn't hardly expect her to grasp the full seriousness of the situation without some study.

She just eyes that yere bandit up and down once or twice and finally she says:

"I suppose you're Loppy Loper who Mr. Harrison told me about I'm very glad you come. I've been dying to see a real bandit."

"I reckons I might as well relieve yuh of all valuables".

"Thanks, lady," said Loper. "Yuh honor me with yuh cordial reception. Sure I'm Loppy See how my right shoulder lops up That's because I uses it so much more than the other You see, I draws my gun from that side And I sure does do a heap of drawing when I'm in society. Yuh don't happen to have no valuables around, do yuh?"

"Valuables?" asks Miss Innocence, smiling awful gracious "Why, no Mr Harrison told me not to carry any. He said he thought you would be visiting Skeleton Gulch before long."

"Oh, he did, eh?" says Loppy. "This yere Harrison critter must have stole my engagement-book, I reckon. I'd like to get it back. Wonder where I can meet up with him"

"RIGHT yere and now," yells a voice from out in front of the school and the instant Cal Harrison runs into view. And he has two guns drawed and they is both he'd on to Loppy more less careless like.

"Put up yuh paws, Loppy," says Harrison, wasting blank cartridge at the outlaw's riding boots.

Of course, Cal didn't suspect that things hadn't all as they ought to be. My pinto and Loppy's was out of sight behind the school, and I looked like a pile of wild fodder with that grass all over me.

"Why," says Loppy, sort of hurt like, "I don't know this yere gentleman." He spoke to Miss Prescott and she up and says:

"Cal, this is Mr Loppy, whom you told me about. Please put away your pistols. He is quite gentle. He will not harm you"

Do you know, I could almost have laughed at that if Loppy hadn't left a yard of muslin in my mouth. But Cal gets real indignant at the teacher's remarks.

"Won't hurt me?" he asks. "I know darned well he won't. Not while I got Jack and Jill unlimbered and pointing his way. Now, Loppy, I wants yuh to imagine that yuh own weapon is red hot. Don't let it burn yuh fingers Drop it"

"How rude," says Loppy, but he drops the gun that he had took from me like as if it was sizzling. Then he turns to Miss Prescott again. I reckon he had her all figured out as the arbiter laureate or something.

"Can't yuh induce yuh star pupils to act politer?" he asks. "I hates to have a brace of fowling pieces playing on to me. Ask him to put 'em away. I'm disarmed"

"Put them away, Cal," says the teacher, to show the outlaw, I reckon, that he had appealed to the proper official. "Mr. Loper will behave Won't you?"

"Sure," he promises easily enough, and as Cal lays his two-handed battery on the porch Loppy whisks his own gun from under his injun vest and continues, "Now I allows as how I fooled the both of yuh."

"Yuh sure did," says Cal, realizing that he was about due to show his affinity how much reckless abandon he packed around with him.

"Why, you broke your word," puts in Miss Prescott, looking at Loppy like as if she'd never play with him again.

"Don't you worry, little lady," says Loppy, "so long as I ain't broke nothing of yourn Now, Friend Harrison, I wants yuh to climb back onto that yere cayuse that's awaiting yuh out front and hop for home They tells me that hopping's awful beneficial to the health sometimes and I reckons as how this yere is one of them times for you. Come on Hop'"

"What you mean—hop?" asks Cal, wondering how I had got the program so mixed up

I could just make out by the expression of his face that he was sure nonplused. He wanted to say, "Wait a minute" and then whisper with the outlaw to see what he should do next. But Loppy Loper was awful impatient

"Hop," he says again "Don't yuh know what hop means?"

"Sure," says Cal, deciding that mebbe I was just making conversation "They put hops in beer"

"Yeah, and they sometimes puts darned fools on a bier, too," Loppy tells him and then he fires one shot at the alkali close to Cal's feet to see him jump

But Cal Harrison didn't even flinch He knowed that it was a blank cartridge At least, he thought he knowed. And that's almost the same thing so long as yuh don't get burned He just looks at Loppy sort of disgusted like and says

"I hates to see ammunition wasted. And I hates to hop It makes me nervous I reckon me and you ain't never going to agree on nothing Just step inside, Miss Prescott I'm going to beat up this yere party"

Can yuh imagine Loppy Loper getting anything like that first hand Honest, he was that surprised he just stands there with his mouth stretched wide and his eyes popping like a scared cow's. And when he see that Cal ain't gone out of his mind entirely he turns to Miss Prescott and says

"You stay yere, lady I wants you to learn how to teach this yere boy something It'll help yuh in yuh special classes with him He's awful backward" Then to Cal

Son I was going to let you drift for home without even taking yuh cigarette papers But now I reckons I might as well relieve yuh of all valuables What yuh got?"

"This" says Cal prompt enough and he yanks forth his dollar watch and hands it to Loppy And what happened then was due to the fact that Cal Harrison thought he knowed that that yere loaded gun pointing at him didn't contain nothing but blanks

As he hands Loppy the time-teller with his left he hands him something else with his right and Loppy sure did melt He went to his knees like a bull that was hilled for beef And his gun went off to one side like as if it saw something there that it wanted real bad

"Oh" tells the faculty getting all worked up over the me'ee And then she put both hands over her ears so what Loppy was saying wouldn't ought to mean it all with her

For Loppy sure was painting the other a glorious blue He was telling Cal Harrison all the adjectives he knew and he kept it up until [illegible] right down out [illegible]

We'll [illegible] all over the [illegible] And [illegible] rolled down the grass [illegible] bumps left the side [illegible] what Miss Prescott had [illegible] and they was still [illegible] inside of four seconds It sure was [illegible]

I was that worn up that I tried to [illegible] my hands and I wanted to rest And I wiggled around [illegible] that [illegible] rub know [illegible] of the grass [illegible] off me Then I sure did keep [illegible] I didn't let none of the details of the exhibit on out front escape me

First Cal was on top Then Loppy works his way up And all the time they kept changing their working location until they rolled 'em around [illegible] front of the school and I couldn't see [illegible] no more But I could hear 'em Then they grunted and cussed each other [illegible] was audible at a distance, and every once in a while Cal yelled something about

"Give in yuh darned fool It's time to rescue the girl"

AND I was still wondering how the bout was going to end when who should come running around back of the school but Miss Prescott herself When she saw me she stopped like as if she had hit a wave of poison gas and at first I thought she was going to faint

But no, she sure did have the right material She was kneeling beside me afore I could even grunt and the next instant I was talkible

"Who are you?" she asks deciding to hold an investigation afore tackling the ropes

"I'm Cal Harrison's chum" I tells her. "Lemme loose It needs help"

"You look like Loppy Loper" she says, suspicious like still neglecting the bindings

"I know it" I has to admit "I rigged up this yere way to fool yuh Cal was going to rescue yuh from me But the real Loppy arrived just as I got yere and yere I am Lemme loose if yuh loves Cal"

Well, I dunno whether she loved the boy much but she draws a little pearl-handled pencil sharpener out of her pocket and starts liberating the manila And as she saws she talks

"This serves you right," she says "for trying to fool me"

"Course it does" I agrees "But that ain't helping Cal none Loppy Loper's got a thousand dollar reward hanging over his head He'll kill Cal if he can He's bad—awful bad" And then I got up

"Gee" I says "I wish I had a gun"

And just at that important moment around the corner of the schoolhouse comes the real article And he sure was speeding When he saw me standing in the way, he changes his line of travel and does past me and goes hickety split off around the far side of the school

And the next minute Cal Harrison arrives And I reckon he was awful anxious to catch Loppy Loper for he puts right for me and comes down on my neck like a ton of pay dirt

"Don't," I yells "I ain't Loppy Loper. Let up Yuh're choking me"

"I'll murder yuh" he answers "Look at my eyes Both of 'em's black Yuh darned nigh massacred me afore I realized yuh was fighting real Now I'm going to do some fighting myself"

And with that he fetches me the prettiest little right handed wallop alongside my topknot cruncher that I ever hopes to meet up with And just as the sun went down and the cute little stars began twinkling in the heavens I hear Miss Prescott say

"Cal Cal, this is your friend The real Loppy Loper is getting away There he goes Quick"

THAT darned idiot Harrison hadn't caught on until then that he had been wrestling with the real thing Miss Prescott's voice sounded far off to me like the prospector what fell down the shaft just afore his wife started calling him for dinner

But Cal must have heard her plain And he must have saw the real Loppy running across country with no regard for the traffic regulations For he abandons me without a word of apology, and goes after the genuine article Then I gets up again.

"Oh" sighs Miss Prescott, "your face is swelling terribly I am so sorry he hit you before I could explain"

"Do you know" I tells her, "we're of one mind on that yere subject But 'tain't nothing 'Tain't as if I wasn't used to being kicked by mules I only hope Cal has got another wallop just like it to hand his original if he ever catches him"

"He'll catch him" Miss Prescott assures me She had great confidence in her champion "See Cal has mounted his horse He is swinging his lariat. Look! He is going to lasso him I hope he doesn't miss"

"He won't" says I. "Cal Harrison ain't that kind of a roper There he throws. Yep He's got him Wow! There's a thousand dollars in that catch for Cal. The Sheriff wants Loppy Loper bad."

And the both of us waited there calm like while Cal Harrison leads his thousand dollar find back to the schoolyard When he gets within ear-shot he howls out sympathetically to me

"How's yuh jaw Steve?"

"Sprouting," says I, and it sure was. Yuh'd have thought the rest of me hell wasn't nothing but a suburb to that yere jaw and I reckon it interfered some with my sense of mercy for I yanks the rope out of Cal's hand with a certain amount of inhuman greed and I sure does loop it around the real article until he looks like a home made spinning wheel

And then I turns back to teacher and pupil but I was late They was just breaking away from each other I had missed the last chapter And I reckons Fond Reader, that you'll have to do the same.

Opening the Chestnut Bur in a Hunt for Laughs

Hereditary Talent

UNCLE SI, from across the road, watched Prof. Jenks enter the grocery.

"Nobody knows how many letters he's entitled to write after his name," said some one.

Uncle Si nodded. "But what I can't just make out is how he come by all his smartness. Far's I know none of his forebears ever amounted to much in a lit'rary way."

"What are you talkin' about?" demanded Lew Carker, warmly. "You know's well's I do that his father could spell Nebuchadnezzar quicker'n any other boy in school!"

Could Do Her Part

"ALICE," said the mistress, reprovingly, "this is absolutely the worst pie I ever tried to eat. You told me that you could make as good pies as any cook in the city."

The new kitchen girl placed her arms akimbo and faced her mistress with defiance

"So I can, mum," she said. "So I can. But all the leddies I iver wurrked for mixed the pies thimselves befure I baked 'em, mum"

Cheating

THOUGH hardly a physical hero, the minister of a church in a Southern town had a stern sense of duty in all circumstances. That is why, when some doubt arose as to the safety of the church spire, he decided to become a steeplejack, for the time being, in order to see for himself what was the matter with it

So pleased was he with his accomplishment of this feat that he was disposed to talk a good deal about it His sensations on that memorable occasion were dragged into every sermon, Sunday school class, boys' club meeting and stray conversations, until the whole town was "sicked to death of it."

One day, however, he met his Waterloo. To a group of farmers he was recounting, once more, his experiences.

"And," he was saying, "when at last I reached the very pinnacle and found myself gazing at the bronze weathercock—what do you think I did?"

"I don't know," said one of the farmers, "but I know what you ought to have done."

"And what was that?"

"You ought to have apologized to the cock on the weather vane for doing it out of the job of crowing."

A Complete Angler

"CLARENCE, come in to dinner" Mrs. Jones stood at the door of her cottage, looking over toward a small boy who was fishing with a bent pin and herring bone on the brim of a puddle

"Clarence—dinner"

Still Clarence fished.

"Clarence!"

No answer.

"If you don't come in to dinner at once, my son," threatened Mrs Jones, "I won't give you any at all!"

Only a sudden tension of the small boy's frame as he gazed eagerly into the depths of the murky puddle.

Mrs Jones' patience was at an end. Silently she crept up behind the delinquent and then suddenly seizing him by the shoulders shook him violently to and fro

"You rascal" she cried "Didn't you hear me call"

"No ma" said the youngster stoutly. "I didn't hear you the first three times and the last time I had a bite"

Her Reason

DR JONES had received a note left at his door by a farmer asking him to go as soon as possible to see his little boy, who had a very bad cold

The doctor took one look at the child and turned to the mother

"Don't you know your boy is coming down with the measles?" he asked severely

"Yes doctor I knew he was" said the woman

"Then why in the world did you write me that he had a very bad cold?" asked the doctor

The woman hesitated for a moment, then, looking at her husband, she said, with sullen frankness

"Neither him nor me know how to spell measles"

Easily Pardoned

THAT even the school teacher is human is evidenced by this story which comes from Washington

A little girl was discovered whispering in school and the teacher asked: "What were you saying to the girl next to you when I caught you whispering?"

The culprit hung her head for a moment and then replied, "I was only telling her how nice you looked in your new dress"

"Well, that—yes—I know—but we must—the class in spelling will please stand up!"

THE JOKER.

This is April Fool's Day

When and why did man first set aside April 1 as a festival of pranks and laughs? No one knows. Its origin is lost in the mists of antiquity. Romans of 2000 years ago had a similar yearly celebration.

April Fool's Day is a monument to man's sense of humor—which has carried individuals, nations and whole civilizations through many a crisis.

Man endures nerve strain and conquers economic problems that would kill the strongest beast. When the burden is heaviest it is his ability to relax and laugh that freshens him for the next round of the battle

Humor is a stimulant, an intoxicant.

Humorists make life interesting, keep us from taking the daily grind too seriously. Wherefore, the men who draw the funny pictures and figure out new twists to old jokes are as important as the ones who furnish food, clothing and fuel

Humor is philosophy, presented as a farce. One of the greatest humorists that ever lived was the slave, Aesop. He also was one of the greatest philosophers.

Halfway between wholesome fun and cynicism there is a stage of humor known as ridicule. It has wrecked political parties and their candidates. It is the one thing that office-seekers dread above all else.

For truth, mighty in all forms, is a dead-shot when presented by a philosopher-humorist

You watch April Fool pranks. They seem very funny at the time. Try to analyze them and you realize that humor is a baffling mystery. Nothing harder to explain than a joke.

Charles M. Newcomb, industrial psychologist, says: "Laughter is caused by lapses from the established order, and it is an escape from social rigors and inhibitions, back to the freedom of primeval instincts"

Laughter is man's gleeful way of greeting anything that temporarily defies the natural laws and social regulations which make civilized life a mechanical existence.

Our subconscious minds resent the fact that we have to be in a perpendicular position, with more or less dignity, when we walk. We laugh when a fat man slips on the ice because of the satisfaction it gives us that we are able to keep our feet.

If the fat man hurts himself laughs stop, all rush to his assistance. This gives the lie to the cynic's contention that humor is closely allied to cruelty.

Take the April Fool jokes good-naturedly. They are merely reminders that man hasn't lost his valuable asset, sense of humor.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION TO CONTROL SITUATION IS SUGGESTED.

SURPLUS OF 3000 ARE EMPLOYED, HE CHARGES

Huge Waste of Human Power, of Money and of Coal, Strikes Resulting.

By Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 1—Congressional action to prohibit over-development of the coal industry was proposed here today by Philip Murray, vice president of the United Mine Workers of America, as a cure for the great evil which has America in the grip of a nationwide strike today"

"Ten thousand bituminous mines are being worked in this country when 7,000 mines could produce sufficient coal for the nations needs" he declared. "The reason for this condition is the greediness of corporations who hold undeveloped coal lands to make them pay profits. New mines are opened before there is a market for the products millions of dollars are invested in properties that can only work part time. 150 000 more men than the industry can keep employed are drawn into it.

"We have seasons of great activities in all the mines, followed by long periods of idleness Men are required to live 365 days on the earnings of from 40 to 200 days There is a huge waste of human power, of money and of coal—followed by strikes"

To prevent such strikes, Murray proposes that congress pass "regulatory legislation prohibiting further development of bituminous coal lands for at least ten years"

He suggested that present mines be worked out until as their capacity is diminished it more nearly equalizes the national consumption When this stage is reached according to Mr. Murray's plan, the government, could authorize the opening of new mines to replace the old ones that had been worked out

WASHINGTON, April 1—The bureau of engraving and printing was operating today under practically a complete new executive personnel from the director down and including every division of the bureau The sweeping change in the bureau's administration was effected by President Harding through an executive order last night removing James L. Wilmeth, the director, and a number of division chiefs and other officials, "for the good of the service" Louis A Hill, assistant chief of the division of engraving was named as the new director of the bureau and assumed charge immediately upon promulgation of the order.

The dismissals which came as a complete surprise to those affected were ordered, it was explained, as the result of an extended investigation and in connection with a complete readjustment of the bureau to peace time conditions Officials of the treasury department however failed to throw any light on the dismissal or saying the action and the brief announcement of its promulgation at the white house would have to speak for themselves

HAMBONE'S MEDITATIONS

Flights to regain Royal Power

Aeroplane or Stagecoach, Silver Vanity Case or Ivory Dressing Chest—Results Were Nearly the Same.

SOME months ago ex-Empress Zita of the Hapsburgs accompanied her husband, Charles, in a last futile attempt to regain his crown. They flew from Switzerland to their native Hungary in an aeroplane—a typically modern way to bring about a coup d' etat.

But the cramped cockpit of an aeroplane is a tiny place to contain the personal finery of an empress who is going back to her former glory, to say nothing of the extra collar, spare shirt and necktie which Charles must have taken along. In all probability Zita carefully adapted her wardrobe to the accommodations, but without doubt she carried a vanity case with her favorite perfume Even the speed of departure and the danger of the flight could not deprive the woman of today of these necessities.

This most modern and expeditious method of flight to regain a throne recalls another famous attempt made long ago, when other monarchs tried by other means to regain the power and homage they felt their due.

Styles in personal adornment and methods of travel have changed much since the June night in 1791 when Marie Antoinette accompanied Louis XVI of France on the famous flight to Varennes, which in ultimate effect was even more disastrous than the attempt recently made by Charles and Zita. Louis and Marie traveled by stagecoach.

French Court Cramped at the Tuileries.

In those days the French court, somewhat cramped and subdued, was being conducted at the Tuileries in Paris. It had been brought there from palatial Versailles by the action of the people who seriously mistrusted their majesties. The luxurious soul of Marie Antoinette was much disturbed by this change. She longed passionately for the old extravagant order of things; for Calonne, her favorite minister, to return with his magical system of getting together ready money for his queen to spend.

Once she and the king were with the loyal army of the East near Metz, all would be as before. Then a triumphant return; perhaps the shooting of a few of the mob; Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette would again be absolute rulers of France.

Queen Prepares for Flight.

Months ahead of time Marie Antoinette prepared for this journey. Her ladies in waiting went shopping on foot through the streets of Paris to collect the gowns, the ribbons, the lace, the beautiful towering headdresses which Marie and her two children were to wear in their new glory. All preparations were conducted with the greatest secrecy, lest the projective flight should become known to the National party, members of which were closely watching every move of the king and queen. Several trunks of clothing and other personal finery were smuggled ahead of time across the borders of the Low Countries.

An elaborate dressing-case of carved ivory had been ordered in May to carry the queen's toilet articles. It was disguised as a present for her sister, Archduchess of the Low Countries, and was to be made exactly like one Marie already owned. Delay on the part of the ivory carver caused consternation to the queen. Deciding at last that she must use the case she had, she directed that it be cleaned as a gift for the Archduchess, in such a way "that no trace of the perfumes which might not suit that princess remained." But this ruse failed, for the queen's wardrobe woman, in sympathy with the Revolution, surmised all that was to take place, and gave warning of it to the Mayor of Paris.

Buying Perfume for Marie's Dressing Case.

An ancient bill recently discovered in the files of the firm of Houbigant in Paris gives a good idea of the contents of the ivory dressing case. On the 16th of February, 1791, the bill was paid by Mme. La Countess de Matignon, who had done the shopping for the queen. The purchases extend from July 6 to November 24, 1790. The total amount was 203 livres 8 shillings. The articles listed are indeed an interesting revelation of the heart and desire of a woman who loved luxury and who insisted upon it, even to jeopardizing the success of her flight for freedom. There are 136 pounds of fine powder for the hair, bottles of Eau de Bouquet, jars of pomade, creams, soaps, sponges, packages of toothbrushes, and eight pairs of gloves, then carried by the perfumer.

Houbigant since 1775 had enjoyed the patronage of court and nobility, so it was only natural that the purchases of toilet articles for the queen's flight were made at his shop. No doubt most of the 136 pounds of "poudre fine" went ahead in the trunks, but it is probable that the more personal articles, such as the pomade, the cream, the toilet water and the gloves, had their place in the royal equipage and that they are carried safely packed in the ivory dressing case in the luggage strapped to the back of the traveling coach.

King and Queen Fly to Varennes.

How the venturous heart of Marie must have beat on that night in June when she and her husband and their two children, in disguise, crept out of the palace of the Tuilers, circled the city, and gained their traveling coach on the Chalons road. And how eagerly she must have counted the miles as they flipped by, each one bringing her nearer to the life she desired—homage, bowing, fine compliments, kissing of hands, luxury, extravagance—the grand old order of things again!

Near Varennes a man on horseback dashed to the coach. He shouted some words which were drowned by the rattling of the wheels over the cobble road. In all probability they were: "You are discovered!"

A Flight that Failed.

At Varennes there was some misunderstanding about a change of horses. The king, disguised as a page, argued with the driver in the lower town while the fresh horses waited in the upper. At last they started on again, only to find the bridge between the two towns blocked by troops of the National Gard and armed peasantry. They had lost!

Later Marie, sitting between two piles of candy in the grocery store of one Sam, Mayor of the town, talked to the wife of the good man while the king, at the other end of the shop, tried to explain why he had left Paris. Marie entreated the wife to influence her husband to save the king.

"Bless me, madame, it would be the destruction of M. Sance," was the reply. "I love my king; but, by our lady, I love my husband too, you must know; and he would be answerable, you see."

So it was decided to take king and queen back to Paris.

Stagecoach or aeroplane, ivory dressing case or silver vanity box, the results in these two attempts to regain royal power were both disastrous. Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette were arrested, later to be guillotined; Charles and Zita were arrested, but being considerably more lucky were banished to the pleasant island of Madeira for the rest of their days

Ex-Empress Zita who recently accompanied her husband, ex-Emperor Charles of Austria-Hungary, on an aeroplane dash from Switzerland in a vain attempt to regain his throne.

LEADING BATSMEN SAY GOLF HELPS

Ruth and Others Believe Game Will Help Averages This Season.

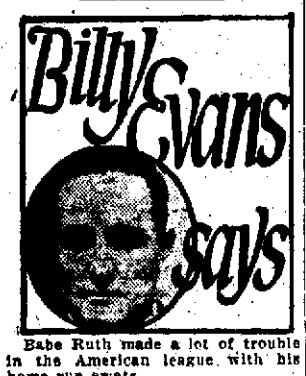
CHICAGO, April 1.—Golf helps the batting average of baseball players, according to leading batters and Babe Ruth of the New York Americans thinks that he may be able this season to equal or even surpass his record of 59 home runs by reason of the alertness of vision for the ball he has gained on the golf links.

Carl Mays also expects to raise his batting average from .345, having reached that ratio from .320 since he took to the links between diamond contests. Other high average batsmen agree that while the golf stroke is different from the baseball hit, especially in that the baseball is moving rapidly in an uncertain manner, the golf swing at a stationary ball less than two inches in diameter with a small club head on an elongated shaft trains the eye to a greater keenness to meet the wits of the most expert pitcher.

Although he has played golf regularly only two years, Babe Ruth has driven 250 yards many times, and once, he declared yesterday after making a pre-season home run at San Antonio, he sent a golf ball 325 yards, which is better than the average of such players as Frances Ouimet and Chick Evans. In fact the record is barely more than 400 yards. On the diamond Ruth said his longest hit was 507 feet, or 169 yards.

Carl Mays, the star pitcher of the New York Americans, who has been playing golf only a little more than a year, said he made a midiron shot of 273 yards last winter on his home course at Springfield, Mo.

Waite Hoyt, another Yankee pitcher, drives a longer golf ball than any other baseball player, his friends say.



Babe Ruth made a lot of trouble in the American league with his home run swats.

I have seen many an argument between pitcher and catcher, and pitcher and manager, after Babe has come through with a home in a pinch.

However, it seems that Babe's ability to hit them over the fence has already made trouble in the National league.

According to the wires, Pitcher Haines of the St. Louis Cardinals, one of the leading pitchers in the National league, is the latest member of the "in bad" society.

It seems that Haines asked Rickey how to pitch to Ruth. Rickey told him. Then, according to the story, Haines pitched just the opposite to his manager's instructions. A home run followed.

An argument ensued. That evening Haines was on the way home. Rickey is reported to have said, "We must have discipline."

Babe is nothing if not original.

Compares Hornsby and Roush.

Burleigh Grimes of the Brooklyn club is one of the leading pitchers in the National league.

Roger Hornsby of the St. Louis Cardinals led the National league in hitting last season.

While Eddie Roush is seventh in the list of hitters, he really ranked next to Hornsby, since the players in between the two in the records played in only a few games.

Hornsby and Roush are great hitters. Hornsby is a right hander while Roush hits from the left side of the plate.

Grimes is a pitcher who marks a careful study of the batters. That is one of the big reasons for his continued success. His opinion therefore is worthy of attention.

The Brooklyn pitching ace says Roush is harder to pitch to than Hornsby. Here is his size-up of the National league's two best batsmen:

"I can tell almost exactly what Hornsby intends to do from his position at the plate, but Roush never.

"Once Hornsby takes his position at the plate he never changes it. If he crowds the plate you know he is trying to hit to right field; if he stands off you know he wants to pull one to left field.

"Hornsby always takes a healthy swing. It is a rarity for him to bunt on you.

"Knowing these things I pitch to Hornsby accordingly. Of course, I don't always fool him. He makes many a base hit off my delivery. What I mean is, there is nothing mysterious about Hornsby's intentions when he steps to the plate.

"On the other hand, Roush always takes the same position when he steps into the batter's box, but he keeps you constantly bewildered by outguessing you.

"He invariably makes his shift after the pitcher starts his delivery. He either suddenly chokes up on his bat or steps away from or into the ball. He can do any of these things from his natural position.

"Often from his position I make up my mind that he intends to take a healthy swing, only to have him lay down a tantalizing bunt.

"More ball games have been lost through bunts than home runs.

"Hornsby and Roush are great hitters, but I would much prefer pitching to Hornsby."

CONNIE MACK SAYS HIS HIS ATHLETICS WON'T BE LAST THIS SEASON

By NEA Service.

BATON ROUGE, LA., April 1.—Connie Mack is sure his ball club will be better this year than last.

As a matter of fact Connie is of the opinion that he now has the best ball club that has represented the Athletics since 1914.

In that year the Athletics won the pennant. Since then the club has had a strangle hold on last place. Draw your own conclusions as to the strength of Connie's present team.

"Sure the Athletics will be better this year than last. We couldn't get any worse." That is the rather terse manner in which Mack dopes out his team of 1922.

"My pitching is certain to be better. The staff will be about the same as last year, but will have benefited by a year's experience," continued Connie.

"The infield and outfield will be stronger combinations since there is plenty of reserve strength. I have two good men for practically every position.

"The spirit is better. Some of the disturbing elements that didn't tend to promote harmony have been removed. I am not saying what they were, but they no longer exist.

"I am not prepared to say where my team will finish, but I do want to go on record that it will not be last."

Connie is of the opinion that the Washington team will be the dark horse of the American league race.

"New York's pitching staff plus the hitting power of the club should again win the pennant for the Yankees," says Mack. "That club stands out as the favorite by a fairly wide margin.

"The Washington club is the team that must be closely watched. The addition of Peckinpaugh gives that club the best infield in the American league.

"The Washington pitching is uncertain, however, and Johnson must come through in big fashion. Likewise Mogridge and Zachary must be as good as they were last year.

"Incidentally, pitching will probably play a prominent part in the chances of Cleveland and St. Louis. Neither club appears to have a strong enough staff.

"It will be about the same as last year in the American league, New York, Cleveland, St. Louis and Washington battling in the first division and Detroit, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston battling for second division honors."

GIANTS EXPECT TO REPEAT IN NATIONAL

McGraw Says He Has Better Ball Club Than He Had In 1921.

By NEA Service.

John McGraw expects to win another pennant in 1922 with his New York Giants.

Hughey Jennings, who assists McGraw in directing the destinies of the Giants, is equally certain they will repeat.

"I have a better club than last year," is the terse manner in which McGraw sums up his chances.

"A strengthened ball club, plus the confidence that goes with winning a world's championship, insures another pennant," is the dope Hughey Jennings offers.

McGraw is certainly entitled to be called the "go-getter" of baseball.

Winning pennants is his specialty. He just naturally goes and gets them.

Quick to realize when his team is slipping, McGraw doesn't wait until the crash, rather he prepares for it.

Backed by an unlimited supply of cash, money never stops him when he is satisfied some player will supply the required strength.

Despite the fact that the Giants won the pennant last year, also the world's series, McGraw brought the biggest squad south of any of the major league clubs.

Only one position on the ball team, center field, is in doubt, yet McGraw has been carefully looking over about 30 recruits.

Here are some of the reasons McGraw advances for his opinion that the Giants will repeat in the National league.

"I have the best infield in either league in Kelly, Frisch, Bancroft and Groh. In Johnny Rawlings I have the best utility infielder in the National league.

"In Snyder and Smith I have two experienced catchers. They are capable of alternating if I so desire. Some clubs may have one man who stands out more prominently, but no club boasts of two catchers as good as Smith and Snyder.

"My pitching will be up to the standard. Douglas, Nehf, Barnes and Toney are regulars. Bill Ryan and Pat Shea are about due. Virgil Barnes looks ready for the big show.

"George Burns will be missed for a time at least. In Shinners and Cunningham I have two youngsters certain to develop into stars.

"Meusel will be in left and Young in right, with either Cunningham or Shinners in center. At the present time Shinners has the call. He looks like a real star.

"I figure the Giants to win because my club unquestionably stands out as the class of the league.

"If the Giants fail I will be willing to take all the blame."

On paper McGraw's team certainly stands out as the class of the league.

The big IF with the Giants is the pitching.

Will Phil Douglas observe training rules throughout the season?

Is Fred Toney slipping? His form in the world's series made it seem so.

Was the remarkable showing of Jesse Barnes against the Yankees a mere flash?

A lot of National league players are inclined to that opinion. Unquestionably McGraw's only problem is pitching.

Zbyszko Is Draw.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., April 1.—Stanislaus Zbyszko and Armon Lalime wrestled twelve eight minute rounds here last night in a contest billed for the Greco-Roman championship of the world. Neither won a fall.

BESCHER REPORTS TO SKIPPER SALM

If Salary Difference Can Be Arranged Outfielder Will Probably Be Kept.

Bob Bescher, the only real Spudder holdout, reported to Manager Walter Salm Saturday morning, but stated that he did not know definitely what his plans for the coming season would be. He came in to confer with the Spudder skipper in an effort to settle the salary question and if all differences are patched up it is probable that Salm will keep him in preference to a pitcher whom he had planned on carrying for the year. Bescher is several pounds overweight, judging from all appearances, but stated that he never felt better in his life.

MACK HAS FAITH IN THREE YOUNG HURLERS

One big reason why Connie Mack hopes to make considerable trouble this year lies in his pitching staff.

In addition to his regulars—Harris, Hasty, Rommel, Naylor and Moore—he believes three of the youngsters taken south will prove valuable second string men.

Heimach, a left hander, tried out last spring and then sent to Moline, Ill., is certain to stick.

He helped Earl Mack win a pennant in the Three-I league, where he won 24 and lost eight games. He also is a good hitter and Connie expects some help from him.

Bryan Yarrison, with Rocky Mount last year, is a pitcher of the Carl Mays type. He uses an underhand delivery that is very effective. Yarrison is a graduate of Gettysburg college.

Frank Loftus, who pitched in the Blue Ridge league last season, looks promising. He has done excellent work in the exhibition games.

TWO ALLEGED CHICKEN THIEVES GET JAIL TERM

Malcolm Pearce and P. Stuckey, who were arrested Friday evening by the sheriff's department entered a plea of guilty before Judge Guy Rogers of the county court at law to the charge of theft of chickens. Peace was given ninety days and Stuckey 40 days. It was alleged in the complaint that the chickens were stolen from Robert C. Thorman. The thieves who took the chickens from Grandpa and Grandma Layne have not been apprehended.

Yankees Will Start Pennant Race With A Weak Outfield

By NEA Service.

The one soggy sector in the New York Yankees' battlefront is the outfield, and this is rated as weak only because Babe Ruth and Bobbie Meusel are under suspension for violations of the anti-barnstorming rule last fall. They will not be eligible to play until the 20th of May.

This means that Huggins will have to start the season with a makeshift outfield which may or may not be up to major league standards. Certainly it will not possess the offensive punch which the great bambino and the languid Californian gave to the picket line trio of last year.

Elmer Miller, acquired in trade from the St. Paul club of the American association last summer, will again play center field, with Wilson (Chick) Fewster in left and Camp Skinner, from the Dallas club of the Texas league, or Hinkey Haines, former Penn State football star, in right.

This arrangement is neither notably weak nor is it very strong. It seems to be the best that the outfield material at Manager Miller Huggins' disposal permits.

Miller is a splendid fielder but an uncertain hitter and Fewster and Skinner are good hitters but erratic fielders. Haines is a wonderful defensive man, quite as effective in this respect as Elmer Miller himself. However, it is a question whether he will ever be able to hit up to major league requirement.

Haines is naturally a right-handed batter, but seems to be muscle-bound in his right shoulder and cannot get a good, free swing from his normal stance.

Manager Miller Huggins has him batting left-handed this spring and the results to date have been most encouraging. But whether he will continue to hit when the pitchers get good is another thing again.

SPALDING'S 1922 RECORD BOOK HAS NEW FACTS

Spalding's Official Baseball Record for 1922, just published, is the most complete compilation of baseball facts ever issued.

In attempting to make the book as nearly error proof as possible it has again been carefully reviewed.

Careful investigation of some of the records of the days of dad, as well as mere heresay, have been unmade after careful editing.

One of the most important changes relates to the home run record of the National league.

Cravath, formerly of the Phillies, has been credited with holding the league record for home runs with 117.

It develops that the honor really belongs to Sam Thompson, who, while with the Detroit and Philadelphia clubs, piled up 127 home runs in 14 seasons.

A new chapter in the book deals with world's series records. The individual performances of every player who has taken part in a big series is listed.

The 1922 edition contains over 400 pages and fairly bristles with interesting facts. Some of them were of 1921 making.

In truth, there is a story in every line of the record book.

HUTCHISON FAVORITE IN NORTH AND SOUTH FINALS

PINEHURST, N. C., April 1.—Jock Hutchison of Chicago, British open champion, was the favorite today when play began in the final 36 holes of the north and south open championship tournament here. Owing to the necessity of cancelling the second round yesterday because of a heavy rainstorm which made the sand putting greens unplayable, the title will be decided on the scores made for 54 holes, those returned yesterday morning and for the full 36 holes today counting.

Hutchison went into the final day's play with a one-stroke lead over the field. He was 33-37-70 yesterday with Pat Doyle of St. Louis, Mo., second with 71.

THE "ROOKIE" GETS IN BAD

"An invitation? Whyever didn't she write me?" "Whyever" again.—"May I see it?"

He took a letter from his pocket and handed it to her. "It's not exactly an invitation—not formal."

She did what he called "flicked" the letter out of its envelope. He watched her reading it and in his mind he could see as perfectly as she with her eyes, the odd, neat script; in his mind he read it with her, word by word.

Dear Marko—We're back. We've been from China to Peru—almost. Come up one day and be bored about it. How are you? Nona.

His thought was, "Damn the letter!"

Mabel handed it back, without returning it to its envelope. She said, "No, it's not formal."

She snipped three roses with astonishing swiftness—snip, snip, snip! In half an hour the shallow basket was beautified with fragrant blooms and Mabel thought she had enough.

"Well, that's that," said Sabre as they re-entered the morning room.

III

She took up a creamy rose and snipped off a stalk over the saucer. "Why does she call you 'Marko'?"

He was utterly taken aback. If the question had come from anyone but Mabel, he would have quite failed to connect it with the letter. But here had distinctly been an "incident" over the letter, though so far closed, as he had imagined, that he was completely surprised.

He said, "Who? 'Nona?'"

"Yes, Nona, if you like. Lady Tybar."

"Why, she always has. You know that."

Mabel put the rose into a specimen vase with immense care and touched a speck off its petals with her fingers. "I really didn't."

"Mabel, you know you do. You must have heard her."

"Well, I may have. But long ago. I certainly didn't know she used it in letters."

He felt he was growing angry.

"What on earth's the difference?"

"It seems to me there's a great deal of difference. I didn't know she wrote you letters."

He was angry. "Damn it, she doesn't write me letters."

She shrugged her shoulders. "You seem to get them, anyway."

Maddening!

And then he thought, "I'm not going to let it be maddening. This is just what happens." He said, "Well, this is silly. I've known her—we've known one another—for years, since we were children, pretty well. She's called me by my Christian name since I can remember. You must have heard her. We don't see much of her—perhaps you haven't. I thought you had. Anyway, dash the thing. What does it matter?"

"It doesn't matter"—she launched a flower into a vase—"a bit. I only think it's funny, that's all."

"Well, it's just her way."

Mabel gave a little sniff. He thought it was over. But it wasn't over. "If you ask me, I call it a funny letter. You say your Christian name, but it isn't your Christian name—Marko! And then saying, 'How are you?' like that——"

"Like what? She just said it, didn't she?"

"Yes, I know. And then 'Nona.' Don't you call that funny?"

"Well, I always used to call her 'Nona.' She'd have thought it funny, as you call it, to put anything else. I tell you it's just her way."

"Well, I think it's a very funny way and I think anybody else would think so. I don't like her. I never did like her."

He thought, "My God, this bickering! Why don't I get out of the room?"

"Come back for a day off with me! It's a funny thing you came back just in time to get that letter! Before it was delivered! There! Now you know!"

He was purely amazed. He thought, and his amazement was such that, characteristically, his anger left him; he thought, "Well, of all the——"

But she otherwise interpreted his astonishment. She thought she had made an advantage and she pressed it. "Perhaps you knew it was coming?"

She seemed to pause, to be considering. "She might have told you. You might have seen her."

He said, "As it happens, I did see her. Not three hours before I came back."

She seemed disappointed. She said, "I know you did. We met Lord Tybar."

And he thought, "Good lord! She was trying to catch me."

She went on, "You never told me you'd met them. Wasn't that funny?"

"If you'd just think a little you'd see there was nothing funny about it. You found the letter so amazingly funny that, to tell you the truth, I'd had about enough of the Tybars. And I've had about enough of them."

"I daresay you have—with me. Perhaps you'll tell me this—would you have told me about the letter if I hadn't seen you get it?"

He thought before he answered and he answered out of his thoughts. He said slowly, "I—don't—believe—I—would. I wouldn't. I wouldn't because I'd have known perfectly well that you'd have thought it—funny."

IV

No answer he could have made could have more surprised her. "I—don't—believe—I—would." Deliberation! Something incomprehensible to her going on in his mind, and as a result of it a statement that no one on earth (she felt) but he would have made. Anyone else would have said boldly, blusteringly, "Of course I would have told you about the letter." She would have liked that. She would have disbelieved it and she could have said, and enjoyed saying, she disbelieved it. Or anyone else would have said furiously, "No, I'm damned if I'd have shown you the letter." She would have liked that. It would have affirmed her suspicions that there was "something in it"; and she wished her suspicions to be affirmed. It would have been something definite. Something justifiably incentive of anger, of resentment, of jealousy. Something she could understand.

She could not express her feelings in words. She expressed them in action. She arose violently and left the room. The whole of her emotions she put into the slam of the door behind her. The ornaments shivered. A cup sprang off a bracket and dashed itself to pieces on the floor.

"I don't live. I just go on"—she paused—"Flotsam."

CHAPTER IV

I

These events were on a Monday. On the following Thursday Nona came to see him at his office.

She stood still immediately she was across the threshold and the door closed behind her. She was smiling as though she felt herself to be up to some lark. "Hullo, Marko. Don't you hate me for coming in here like this?"

"It's jolly surprising."

"That's another way of saying it. Now if you'd said it was surprisingly jolly! Well, shake hands, Marko, and pretend you're glad."

He laughed and put out his hand. But she delayed response; she first slipped off the gauntlets she was wearing and then gave him her hand. "There!" she said.

"There!" It was as though she had now done something she much wanted to do; as one says "There!" on at last sitting down after much fatigue.

She tossed her gauntlets on to a chair. She walked past him towards the window. "You got my letter?"

"Yes."

Her face was averted. Her voice had not the lilt in it with which she had spoken at her entry.

"You never answered it."

"Well, I'd just seen you—just before I got it."

She was looking out of the window. "Why haven't you been up?"

"Oh—I don't know. I was coming."

"Well, I had to come," she said.

He made no reply. He could think of none to make.

II

She turned sharply away from the window and came towards him, radiant again, as at her entry.

"Well, I like you best when you're thinking. You puzzle, don't you, Marko? You've got a funny old head. I believe you live in your old head, you know. Puzzling things. Clever beast! I wish I could live in mine." And she gave a note of laughter.

"Where do you live, Nona?"

"I don't live. I just go on"—she paused—"flotsam."

Strange word to use, strangely spoken!

It seemed to Sabre to drop with a strange, detached effect into the conversation between them. His habit of visualizing inanimate things caused him to see as it were a pool between them at their feet, and from the word dropped into it, ripples that came to his feet upon his margin of the pool and to her feet upon hers.

He took the word away from its personal application. "I believe that's rather what I was thinking about when you came, Nona. About how we just go on—flotsam. Don't you know, on a river where it's tidal, or on the seashore at the turn, the mass of stuff you see there, driftwood and spent foam and stuff, just floating there, uneasily, brought in and left there—from somewhere; and then presently the tide begins to take it and it's drawn off and moves away and goes—somewhere. Arrives and floats and goes. That's mysterious, Nona?"

Browns Have Five Promising Hurlers Among Recruits

The St. Louis Browns took 13 young pitchers south, proving that Manager Fohl is not superstitious.

These pitchers are of all sizes and ages. Five of them have impressed the veteran Brownies and Manager Fohl.

Here is the dope on the youngsters who have a chance to stick.

There is Roy Davis of the semi-pro fields of Herrin, Ill., a right-hander, who has impressed Manager Fohl. He leads the class of pitchers as a prospect because he has been at the game for about half a dozen years and possesses the general knowledge of pitching.

Another prospect marked for future delivery is Hubert Pruett of the University of Missouri, a left-hander.

The first day George Sisler batted against Pruett the "Michigan Marvel" said that the young southpaw had more speed and a better curve than he did when he was the sensation at Michigan. And Pruett can be considered a sandlot pitcher.

Next is Henry Dolen, a 6-foot-4 right-hander, who has never been away from his home town of Breese, Ill.

Dolen runs along the lines of Bryan Harris of the Athletics, a wide sweeping curve, a nice hop to his fast ball. More experience should fit Dolen for a prominent place on the baseball shelf.

Then comes Jamie Elliott, a husky southpaw, a duplicate of Jim Vaughn. Elliott finished the past season with the Terre Haute club in the Three-Eye league. Another raw kid but a fast ball which struck out Johnny Tobin twice.

Henry Meine, with Beaumont in 1921, is another who has drawn favorable comment from the Brownie regulars. Meine is a powerful right-hander with a nice free motion who studies his batters and plays on their weak spots.

NEW YORK, April 1.—The cotton market showed the effect of rain falling in Texas during the last few days. The weather map showed yesterday rains in eastern belt sections but clearing conditions were reported this morning and the prospects for more favorable weather combined with the coal strike and continuance of labor troubles in New England promoted realizing for over the week end. The opening was five points higher to [illegible] points lower with active months selling off and changed to 7 points lower right after the call but if anything weak end reviews of the cotton trade were a little more encouraging and the market showed a steady undertone around 1[illegible] for July and 19[illegible] for October. Manchester cables said the trade improvement there had been maintained during the week. Mill River sales of print cloths for the week were estimated at 100,000 pieces.
